

Where the Waves Meet the Wag

Katrina

This story is inspired by some pictures I painted.

At the Seaside in Campbeltown, two dogs called Lucy and Gillan, one black and one cream, were playing and splashing in the sea. They said hello to the seals and the surfers. Near the harbour, they saw red and blue sailing boats reflecting the sunshine.

Whilst shaking off the water, Lucy and Gillan smelt sandwiches and fruits that people were enjoying on the beach. In their excitement, they ran up to the group and made a bit of a mess of their picnic! The family were a bit annoyed that their nice picnic had been ruined. Suddenly Lucy and Gillan could hear a boy crying out struggling to swim, together they ran back into the waves and helped the boy return safely to the shore. The boy asked if they wanted to join him and his family for a treat as a thank you for helping him. Whilst walking up the beach they realised it was the same family whose picnic they had made a mess of! Lucy and Gillan were very apologetic, but the family had forgiven them as they had been reunited with the boy.

It had been such a hot and eventful day, everyone decided to go and get an ice cream together and the family invited Lucy and Gillan back to their house by the lake to relax.
